A Future Stolen: Stop Child Marriage and Help Girls Stay in School

Every three seconds, a girl is forced into marriage – denied her right to education, freedom, and a future. Your support can help stop this.

Aisha's childhood ended at 12. Instead of going to school, she was forced to marry a man twice her age. Her dreams of becoming a doctor disappeared overnight.

Each year, 12 million girls like Aisha lose their education and future to child marriage. Without schooling, they remain trapped in poverty, vulnerable to abuse, and powerless to shape their own lives.

But change is possible. After escaping a forced marriage, 15-year-old Monalisa (pictured) re-enrolled in school with the support of Plan International. “Now I can learn and dream again,” she says. “I want to be a teacher so I can help other girls.”

Plan International is working in communities to end child marriages, provide education, and protect girls from harm. But we can't do it alone. With your support, more girls can stay in school, escape forced marriages, and build brighter futures.

Every donation helps safeguard a girl's right to learn, grow, and choose her path.
